

Nestled within the sublime Sian Ka'an Biosphere Reserve –a UNESCO World Heritage Site and one of Mexico's largest protected areas –lies Casa Chablé, a stunning retreat that beckons you to let wild nature awaken you fully to the present.

Sian Ka'an means origin of the sky in Mayan. Brimming with life, Sian Ka'an is an abundant habitat for an astoundingly diverse range of flora and fauna. More than 100 mammals have been documented, including endangered species –the Central American Tapir, the Yucatan Black Howler Monkey and the Black-handed Spider Monkey among them. Over 330 species of birds soar, dip and forage in Sian Ka'an, more than half of these species breeding here. More than 40 species of amphibians and reptiles make their home here, including four of Mexico's six coastal turtle species, and the still-vulnerable American crocodile. Over 850 plant species with roots, stems and leaves grow lushly throughout Sian Ka'an.

The Reserve's coastal waters are home to a small number of vulnerable West Indian Manatees. The portion of the Mesoamerican Reef – the world's second-largest barrier reef – that is within the Sian Ka'an Biosphere Reserve, is home to 80 species of reef-building coral, making it one of the richest portions of reef in all of Mexico, a thriving habitat for more than 400 fish species and other fascinating marine life.

During your three nights amid lush, wild leaves, melodic birdsong, beckoning skies and crystalline waters, your blissful escape to nature will transport you to the present.
